Figure 1. The relationship between the number of species and the number of individuals in the samples. The number of individuals in the samples was divided into 100 equal groups, and the number of species in each group was counted. The number of species was then plotted against the number of individuals in the samples. The relationship between the number of species and the number of individuals in the samples was found to be a power-law relationship, which is consistent with the predictions of the species-area curve.
